 $Yes, you can use the \textbf{Pending} \ \underline{Ticket} \ \underline{Status} \ to \ mark \ a \ \underline{Ticket} \ that \ cannot \ move \ forward \ for \ an \ extended \ period \ of \ \underline{Status} \ that \ \underline{Status} \ to \ \underline{Status} \ that \ \underline{Status} \ that \ \underline{Status} \ that \ \underline{Status} \ \underline{Status} \ that \ \underline{Status} \ \underline$ "time due to a stall either on the Agent or User side, or put them "on hold

Pending status is a way to record that an Agent needs to act on the Ticket, but that you're waiting for .something else to happen first. This often involves waiting for a third party

For example, a User has raised a new Ticket and you need to check something with one of your suppliers before . you reply. You have emailed the supplier and you are waiting to hear back
